Communication skills

The ability to communicate effectively with superiors, colleagues, and staff is essential, no matter what industry you work in. Workers in the digital age must know how to effectively convey and receive messages in person as well as via phone, email, and social media.

Organisational / managerial skills

The point of a deadline is to keep tasks, deliverables, and projects under control so that business operations can flow smoothly. In retail or restaurant jobs, time management is crucial for serving customers promptly and keeping them pacified even when it is busy. Time management is an important skill employer looks for because, without it, a business can lose clients, miss goals, fail inefficiency, or miss important time-specific opportunities. Time management requires a good sense of work gauge so that you can correctly allot the time needed for a task. But it's not just about scheduling. Good time management also requires discipline, quick thinking, knowing how and when to delegate, and knowing when to use strategies for dealing with procrastination, distraction, and even unplanned events. My last designation was Ecommerce Executive In-Charge for that great power for management skills.
